THE BIG ONE

THANKSGIVING DAY! And don't think that because the Pixies lived in the forest they didn't know all about it. They knew it was the day on which they were to be thankful for all their blessings. And they knew, too, that they wanted to celebrate it with a great, big feast.

The town council had decided to have this great feast right in the center of Pixerary Square. There was only one obstacle, they didn't have a table large enough to seat all the Pixies. Polly, Prunella, Patricia, and all the other Pixie women were very busy cooking in their walnut shell pots. Mary, Meg, Mathilda, and all the Pixie girls were busy getting the rose-petal dishes ready.

But the men, and the young boys too, were all scouting around outside the town looking for a table large enough to seat each and every Pixie. No one was to be left out. "We could make a table of our own," said Pete, "if we could find a large enough board."

"Well," said Tom and Launcelot, "we saw a great big board up there on the hill. Only it's so big that no one could carry it."

"Come on, men," called Pete Pixie. "We're going up to the top of the hill to see the big board the boys found."

The board was very big. It was the top of an old sleigh, without runners. It would easily be big enough for a table top for all the Pixies. There was only one difficulty. How were they to carry that tremendous piece of wood down to Pixerary? All the men stood around the board and at a signal tried to lift it. Although every man and boy from Pixerary was there, the board couldn't be budged one single inch.

So the men and boys all headed toward Pixerary. All of them, that is, except Tom. He lingered on behind, running down this path and that, glad of the excitement of being away from home and on an adventure.

The men had been back for quite a while when Tom came rushing up to them. "There's a monster roaming around here!" he cried. "A huge monster! I bet he came to spoil our Thanksgiving party. Let's try to get him before he eats us all up."

"Now wait a minute," said Pete Pixie. He knew that Tom was very excitable and might be working on his imagination at the moment. "Did you see this monster yourself?"

"No, I didn't see it," said Tom, "but I saw its footprints—great big footprints in the path just outside Pixerary."

"Everyone remain here and go on with your preparations," said Pete. "Tom and I will go out to investigate those footprints."

Pete and Tom went to the spot where the footprints were supposed to be and, sure enough, there they were. They were enormous footprints.

Pete was very puzzled. He hadn't heard any strange noises about and couldn't imagine what those footprints were.

"It's a mystery to me," said Pete. "You go back to town and line up all the men to carry that heavy rope we have up here."

Tom rushed back so fast and found the rope so quickly that before long all the Pixie men were seen coming up the path very slowly, tugging the heavy rope.

"Now," said Pete, "we're going to tie one end of the rope to a tree and leave the other end out in the path, tied loosely in a loop. When whoever it is that prowls around here walks by, he'll step inside the loop without realizing it and keep on walking. But the farther he walks, the tighter he'll pull this loop around his leg and he'll be caught!"

"We can even cover the rope with some leaves," said Tom. "Then no one will be able to see the rope."

When everything was set they all went back to town to continue with the Thanksgiving preparations. That is, everyone except Tom, who again stayed behind to watch. He had agreed with Pete that he would hide in a tree nearby and watch to see what would happen.

Of course, he was just the least bit frightened out there, all by himself. But he was the one who had found the foot-steps and he wanted to be the one to catch the culprit. While waiting, he dozed off, woke up, dozed off again, and still nothing happened.

"Grrrrr, boooow-woooow!"

"Oh, my, what's that?" cried poor Tom Pixie as he woke with a start and nearly tumbled out of the tree. "Oh, it must be the intruder. Now I'll find out who has such big feet and I'll be the first Pixie to find out, too. Then I'll go back to Pixerary and tell the others after he's been caught in a trap, and I'll be the hero!"

A big, white animal came by, walking slowly, sniffing here and there under the trees. "I wonder what he's looking for?" said Tom, "smelling around like that. Sometimes animals find things by smelling them instead of seeing them, I know. Maybe he's looking for Pixerary so that he can eat us all up."

Meanwhile the animal was walking closer and closer toward the trap and although the loop of rope was covered with leaves, Tom knew when he stepped in it. Then the animal walked three or four steps, the loop tightened and the animal started to howl, "GRRR-RRR-RR Boow-woooow!"

"This is it!" said Tom. "He's caught! Now I can run and tell everybody in Pixerary that I caught the big bad animal who was going to eat everybody all up."

Breathlessly he arrived in Pixerary. Everyone was in their little mushroom houses busily at work preparing for the feast. They had almost forgotten about Tom and the footprints.

"We got him!" shouted Tom. "I mean, I got him—a big white fierce-looking animal that wanted to eat me up and then eat everyone else. It's a good thing he stepped into the trap!"

"Everybody stay here," said Pete. "Tom and I will go back to see what we can do with this enemy now that we've caught him."

Tom and Pete ran all the way to the spot and there they found the large white animal lying on its side groaning, whining and yelping, "boow-woooow-grrrrr!" It was so big that neither Pete nor Tom could reach the top of him even though he was lying down.

"How can we kill him?" said Tom. "He's so big."

"Hush!" said Pete. "Maybe we don't have to kill him. I'll walk up close and see if he snaps at me." Very stealthily Pete approached the huge animal and looked close at his face. The animal didn't snap at him. As a matter of fact, the face looked very sad and the eyes seemed even sadder. "Why, Tom," said Pete, "this animal doesn't even want to snap at me. He's very quiet and very sad. The rope is probably hurting his foot. I wonder if I should free him!"

The animal wagged his tail and Pete set about loosening the rope. Tom was frightened and scuttled up a tree to watch the proceedings. But when the animal was free, it stood up, shook itself and wagged its tail. It didn't try to bite or snap at Pete.

"Why," said Pete, "this is a dog, a nice friendly dog that wouldn't hurt the Pixies or anyone else. I didn't recognize him until he stood up straight. He can even help us with our feast."

"Our Thanksgiving feast?" asked Tom.

"Surely, I'll ask him to follow me to where the big board is that we want to use for a table and he'll be able to carry it to Pixerary. Go and get all the strong men again, Tom."

When Tom came to the spot where they had left the big sleigh without the runners, they found Pete and the dog waiting for them. The Pixie men were amazed to see Pete Pixie standing near such a giant of an animal, even though it seemed so friendly. They all got together so that they could pick up the heavy rope and tied one end of it around the board and the other end around the animal, who they decided to call "Wow," just like the sound he made.

Wow dragged the board down the path as if it were no heavier than a leaf from a tree. When they arrived in Pixerary, all the ladies shouted, "Hurray! Hurray! At last we have a table."

Wow shook himself and wagged his tail happily, and forever after he was the Pixies' best friend.
